Between The Lines

Mark your calendar for another U.S. 1 publishing first: Next Monday is Memorial Day and our office will be closed. The deadline for editorial and advertising material is 5 p.m. Friday, May 24. Classified ads that are submitted by fax (609-452-0033) or by E-mail (us1news@aol.com) are a special exception: We will take them up until Monday at 5 p.m.

Why is this a first? In the old days of biweekly publication, our poor staff would have to work on a Monday holiday preceding a publication date. The pressures of the biweekly deadline were too great to permit a day off. But with the weekly deadlines, and the more even distribution of work throughout the week, the impossible is now possible. The May 29 issue will tell us if our theory is correct.

About that issue: Wired on the Web. Many of you were frustrated attempting to fax us the coupon describing your web page for our survey. That's because we had incorrectly stated our own fax number. The correct coupon appears on page 18 of this issue. If you haven't gotten through to us, please try again. And please do it ASAP — this is a short week.

Political Realities

Why doesn't U.S. 1 cover politics? We get asked that question every so often and we now have a short answer and a long answer. The short answer is Rush Holt. The long answer is — well, let's just explain the short answer.

Last week we profiled the aforementioned Rush Holt, the 47-year-old administrator from the Princeton Plasma Physics Lab who had resigned from the lab to run for congress in the 12th District. To us it wasn't a political story, but a career story. A middle-aged guy in the heart of our circulation area has made a career leap. Was he pushed out, part of a downsizing at the lab? No, our sources agreed, he was still in good standing at the lab. But, they added, now that he's gone his chances of coming back are bound to be affected by the lab's ever-tightening budget.

If it had been only a political story — a career politician trying to move up the food chain — we would not have touched it.

Try to explain that to the politicos who rang our bell on Wednesday, May 15, publication date of the "What Makes Rush Run" cover story. "Why did you cover him — why didn't you cover our candidate also?" was the plaintive cry from the camps of the other Democratic contenders. We gave the long answer — see above — but we had the feeling they really weren't buying it. We resisted a bit of sweet revenge: Why didn't they immediately return our initial phone calls, requesting biographical information on their candidates?

The Republicans initially didn't respond at all. But then one of our editors ran into a young Republican who was organizing a debate of the four Republican candidates on Friday, May 24, at 8 p.m. at Kelsey Theater at Mercer Community College (see page 24 for details). "Why did you endorse Rush Holt?" the young Republican asked. Sorry, kid, this was not an endorsement. "What about equal time?" Sorry, kid, equal time is for the broadcast media, which are monopolizing a limited number of publicly-owned airwaves. Anybody with a PC and a laser printer can launch a publication like ours.

So what are we missing by not covering politics? For one we are missing all the juicy political gossip. If you subscribe to New Jersey Monthly magazine, turn to page 14 of the June issue. There is the word that Victor Christiano has renamed his Hopewell hair dressing salon from Jolie & Victor to Christiano's. Christiano, it seems, is not only Christie Whitman's hairdresser, but he also trims the locks of lobbyists Judy Shaw, Nancy Becker, Colleen McCann, and Sharon Harrington, and judges Virginia Long and Judith Yaskin. And Christiano is about to move from New Hope to Lambertville and into a "condo" — implicitly more expensive than an apartment — owned by Dave Del Vecchio.

And then there is the other thing we miss by not covering politics: Fascinating letters to the editor from the various political camps. For examples, please read on.

Del Vecchio's Saga

As the grandson of immigrants who came through Ellis Island, I believe the most important challenge facing us today is keeping the American dream alive for the next generation. My father had a union card and a ninth grade education that put food on our table and my brothers and I through college — the first in his family to do so. I am running for Congress to help make sure the next generation has even more education and job opportunities available to them.

Creating economic opportunity for New Jersey residents has been the focus of my efforts in public service. In 1991 I was elected Mayor of Lambertville in Hunterdon County and reelected in 1994 with 70 percent of the vote. As Mayor I spearheaded various economic development projects, most notably the restoration of the historic Lambertville House and the development of an abandoned factory building into a health club, micro-brewery and professional offices. In addition, I established a small business loan program to help businesses prosper and create jobs.

The economic renaissance Lambertville has experienced under my tenure could not have been possible without a strong commitment to environmental protection. I put safeguards in place to control development in environmentally sensitive areas and reduced pollution by improving the sewer system.

The prosperity of Lambertville's annual Shad Festival — which attracts 30,000 visitors to the town who pump nearly a half million dollars into the economy — is an example of 'ecotourism' on the local front — our successful strategy of using a clean environment to drive economic growth. The festival — held during the last weekend in April — is a celebration of the shad returning to migrate through a cleaned-up Delaware River. The festival was awarded the 1995 Governor's Tourism Council Award for best event.

Because of my strong environmental record, I was one of only a few local officials to earn the endorsement of the New Jersey Environmental Federation's Vote Environment Committee — the state's largest environmental political committee.

Cleaning up the environment. Creating jobs and economic opportunity. Making government more efficient. Providing tax relief to hard working middle-class families. The values I learned from my parents and grandparents have guided my efforts in public service and fueled these accomplishments.

Unfortunately, those same beliefs are now under attack down in Washington and in corporate boardrooms right here in New Jersey. Newt Gingrich and right-wing Republicans are unleashing an unprecedented assault on middle-class values by turning back the clock on environmental protection, cutting education and economic opportunities for young people and cutting Medicare and Medicaid to finance a tax cut for the rich. Meanwhile, corporate CEOs are raking in record profits at the same time they announce massive layoffs that destroy the economic security of middle-class families.

I want to go to Congress to fight Newt Gingrich and his radical agenda. And I want to send a message to corporate America that New Jersey residents want to keep the American dream of economic opportunity alive for the next generation.

During the open convention process, I won the endorsements of all five Democratic Party county organizations, earning me a spot on the same primary team as President Clinton and Congressman Bob Toricelli — New Jersey's next United States Senator.

As mayor, I have a proven record of working for what's right and fighting what's wrong. I am counting on your support in the June 4 Democratic Primary.

The Rush Record

I would like to congratulate you on an excellent piece on Rush Holt appearing in the most recent issue. We appreciate all the time and hard work that was spent in preparing it.

I would like to apologize for a mistake in information I caused at our end of the story. In the process of gathering the necessary numbers I gave Rush Mercer County numbers when he asked for district-wide totals. The number you in turn printed, 49 percent, describing how Rush Holt did in the county conventions overall actually should have been 45 percent when compared to David Del Vecchio and 41 percent when compared to Rich Walling, Carl Mayer, and Del Vecchio. In Mercer County, when compared to Del Vecchio we did in fact poll some 49 percent. Numbers aside, the story is a newcomer to politics was able to do so well in all these counties. Patrick McGlinchy
Rush Holt for Congress

More for Rush

Of the candidates for Congress in the 12th District primary, one stands out as exceptional for voters who care about peace at home and abroad: Dr. Rush Holt.

Rush has come out four-square against Newt Gingrich's Contract with America. He has particularly spoken against the contract's call for increased Pentagon spending in this post-Cold War era, especially the $7 billion the Gingrich congress added last year above what the Pentagon even requested. Rather than cutting Head Start, child nutrition, student aid, health care, and similar programs that help most Americans, Rush would make sensible cuts in the largest, most wasteful bureaucracy of all: The Pentagon.

On nuclear weapons Rush supports a Comprehensive Nuclear Test Ban and further nuclear weapon reductions in a START III Treaty. On conventional weapons, he supports banning U.S. weapons exports to dictators and a ban on land mines. And on weapons in our communities, he supports the assault weapons ban and limiting handgun purchases to one a month, a measure that has greatly reduced gun trafficking in states where it has become law. Perhaps most telling, Rush is one of only two candidates to pledge not to take contributions from military PACs.

The Rev. Robert Moore
John Street, Princeton

Unbelievable?

Politicians are not to be believed, in more ways than one. The latest mind-boggling cost-cutting proposal I heard is advanced by someone calling himself a Democrat. Speaking at Hunterdon Central High School Monday, May 13, David Del Vecchio, mayor of Lambertville and running for Congress in the 12th District, suggested that social security paid to senior citizens ought to be related to their means, rather than what they paid into the Fund all their working lives. His is part and parcel of the meaner-leaner government proposals we have all listened to with growing despair and alarm.

Carl Mayer is another kind of politician. Running as an independent, Mayer finally won a seat on the Princeton Township Committee. I was delighted to learn his committee assignment was a liaison to the Commission on Aging, on which I have served for more than 12 years. My optimism that he would help Princeton's seniors was misplaced; Carl Mayer never came to a Commission meeting nor did he send any explanation.

As I said, politicians are not to be believed. That's why I am voting for Rush Holt, who is not one of the usual boys. Instead of hair-brained proposals, he advances thoughtful ideas which are respectful of the working people who have always been the strength of America.

U.S.1 SURVIVAL GUIDE

Women on the 'Cusp'

In enlightened areas such as the Princeton business community, the competency of women in the workplace is no longer questioned and seldom doubted. In fact, some statistics contend that businesses owned by women are faring more successfully than those owned by men. But one segment of the population — including its female constituency — may have a hard time stomaching this.

Those born before 1946, the 50 or 60-something "silent generation," or "builders," who grew up before the sexual revolution, women's lib, and equal opportunity may need an update.

Herb Spiegel, director of the Small Business Development Center at Mercer County Community College, gives this group the title of "cusper." He discusses "The Cusp Generation — The Changing Roles for Women and Men," at Mercer NJAWBO Thursday, May 23, 6 p.m. in the Palmer Inn, $28. Call 609-443-4844 for more information.

"I'm talking about the woman who walks into the bank and tries to get money to open a business and they look at her and say, 'Is your husband going to co-sign?'" This Old Boy attitude may seem like an anomaly in today's business environment, but it is not defunct, and some women need to be forewarned about it. "Women business owners are going to have to deal with many professional people who don't understand women's roles in business," says Spiegel.

Some may need to adjust to the concept of power women, reports Spiegel, who had to adjust to this himself. "If you had asked me 20 years ago if a woman could run a shipping department or a security department I would have said that's a man's job, but I don't feel that way anymore," he says. "Not only can women practice parallel management, but there are advantages that women can bring to management practices that men don't bring."

Some of these advantages include gushy terms that make certain kinds of men cringe, like caring, empathy, nurturing, and relating. "I think women are terrific networkers," Spiegel says. "Women using some of those traits understand customer relationships and customer service. I think that the commitment and dedication, especially in starting a business, is a trait that women can capitalize on."

Spiegel, former proprietor of a furniture store in Lawrence Shopping Center, experienced his moment of raised awareness over dinner a little under 20 years ago. "I came home from working my full day and looked at my wife, who had worked her full day as a schoolteacher, and said, 'What's for dinner?' And she looked at me straight in the eye and said, 'I don't know, what's for dinner?' The proverbial light bulb went off in my head and I realized that I had to change personally."

A major obstacle to gender equality in the workplace these days is the fact that much of upper management is still in the hands of the "silent" generation. And unfortunately for women, Spiegel's epiphany may be a shining islet in a sea of intransigence among them. "Still there are only three women CEOs on the Inc. 500," he says.

Those most in need of an update on women's roles in the workplace are probably foreign businessmen, Spiegel reports. Their attitudes towards working women may be years, if not decades, behind those in the United States. "It is still a major problem in Europe and Asia where many American firms have been told that if they're sending over a woman consultant that they will probably get a back room job and not really deal with top management," he says.

But Spiegel isn't worrying about this sector — nothing other than the tide of history will change them. "My talk is going to be about dealing with the members of this 'cusp' generation who have had to change our paradigm when dealing with women business owners," says Spiegel. "Twenty-six years in business and I've never called up a guy and said, 'I'm having a bad day, let's go to lunch.'"

Of Acorns & Women

The same day that Herb Spiegel speaks at NJAWBO, another group aimed primarily at women in business will hold a business card exchange and networking party at the Edward D. Jones office at the Princeton Shopping Center. It's Thursday, May 23, beginning at 5:30 p.m. Call 609-730-9086.

D.B. Stokes, principal of Acorn Enterprises, is sponsoring this event. Stokes is also the sponsor of the Acorn Directory, a listing of resources for business professionals that consists of about 85 percent women-owned businesses. Why the emphasis on women? "After my divorce things changed radically for me," says Stokes. "I found that women were especially helpful."

Stokes was married right after college (St. Louis University) and then helped manage the family farm, a 32-acre spot near Flemington that raised Black Angus cattle. "It's tough for a woman of my age to start a business after a marriage," says Stokes, who just turned 50 last week. But now, however, she has started the Acorn directory plus two investment clubs, also aimed chiefly at women.

And, says Stokes, the mother of two daughters, ages 20 and 18, she hopes to start a third investment club in the fall for children. "I'd like to teach them how to budget — especially teenage girls." Her company's motto: "Every mighty oak was once an acorn that stood its ground."

Females Over 40

Downsizing — today's term for layoffs — is particularly hard for men and women over 40. And let's face it — women who started out in the workforce in the '60s and 70s probably had different kinds of careers than their male counterparts.

So it makes sense to offer "women only" job counseling sessions. Kera Greene, a Princeton-based career counselor, has received a grant to give three-day workshops for downsized women who need to hone their job-search skills. Her next workshop starts Monday, June 3, 9 a.m. to 3 p.m., at Mercer County College, in the administration building. It continues on Tuesday, June 4, and Friday, June 7. Class size is limited; $20 covers the three full days.

Getting interviews — and then learning how to make the most of them — will be one of Greene's topics. Her tips:

- Research the organization. Know about the company culture, about company concerns that you can help solve.
- Remember that the interview goes both ways — you are deciding if you want the job as much as the interviewer is deciding if they want to hire you. Plan intelligent questions.
- Write out and memorize several of your past accomplishments. Be sure to discuss them during the interview.

Other topics Greene will cover: assessment of innate skills, personality style and career values, how to research the hidden job market, the "new" electronic resume, networking, using the Internet in your job search, selling yourself, exploring options, and negotiating salary. For those who decide they have had enough of employers, one segment will focus on "starting your own business."

Greene also offers counseling and workshops emphasizing personal power, self-esteem, and spirituality. On Saturday, May 25, at 9 a.m., she begins a bi-monthly group for those who want to achieve goals and would like the support of like-minded people.

An accomplished public speaker who overcame a severe stuttering handicap to excel in the Toastmasters International program (she won a regional speaking award in April) Greene has her master's degree in counseling psychology from Rutgers and has state licensing to offer career counseling. The Women Over 40 workshop is funded by the "Thanks Be to Grandmother Winifred" Foundation aimed at encouraging older women "generally ignored, forgotten, and considered invisible — to have courage and confidence in their ability."

If "Take Your Daughter to Work Day" is meant to circumvent potential conflicts between a young girl's ambitions and her reticence in the presence of boys — then this workshop can offer power and purpose to older women by providing training, single sex style. Call Greene at 609-921-0308 to register.

What About, Like, the Xers?

Contrary to the stereotype that Generation X is a vast wasteland of unmotivated, MTV-fed slackers, 80 percent of Americans trying to start their own business today happen to belong to Generation X, a potentially loyal and competent sector of the working population.

Of course, the question is, what is Generation X? Bruce Tulgan, a 29-year-old member and founder of a New Haven, Connecticut-based consulting firm that advocates Generation X at the workplace, explains that the term has historically been misleading both in terms of its start and end date and the personalities of its members. He denotes an Xer as someone born between 1963 and 1977 (19 to 33 years old). (He also includes the "cusp" generation born between the baby boom and 1963 in some of his studies — both share the same fin de siecle zeitgeist.)

Tulgan discusses "Motivating Generation X at the Workplace," at the two-day conference on corporate communication Wednesday and Thursday, May 22 and 23 at Fairleigh Dickinson University in Madison. Call 201-443-8709. (Tulgan's talk is scheduled for 2 p.m. on Wednesday.) The cost is $345 for two days.

"The real Generation X is cautious about forming relationships, cautious about investing in institutions because they grew up in an era of rapid change when most of society's major institutions were faltering," Tulgan says. "They are independent problem solvers because most of them spent a lot of time alone as children."

Generation Xers are not disloyal to the company either, he adds. "It's not the case that they don't want to pay their dues while demanding instant gratification. The truth is that there are 42 million people between the ages of 19 and 33 in the workforce today, and the vast majority are still trying to make a successful career by having a job in an established company."

Many of the problems faced in the workforce today by Generation X — increased competition for fewer jobs and lack of adequate benefits and job security — are actually helping to hone a very flexible and resilient workforce. "These people want to be entrepreneurs in someone else's company," says Tulgan. "That's their ideal job. They are adaptable because the only thing they know is change."

Tulgan's consulting firm, Rainmaker, specializes in educating management to understand and work with this often-misunderstood segment. He is the author of a book on the subject, "Managing Generation X" (Merritt, $19.95, 244 pages) and is an Amherst College graduate (Class of 1989) with a law degree from New York University.

Tulgan fled a Wall Street law firm after 428 days to start Rainmaker when he witnessed the generation gap and ensuing rift in crucial communications between senior partners and his peers. To bridge the chasm between management and its Generation X underlings, he developed this four-pronged management approach:

Train them continuously. "Don't let training be a one-hump rollercoaster," Tulgan says. Continuous training is consistent with the demands of the Information Age. Generation Xers "learned to think in a tidal wave of information. So give it to them. Tell them what you need them to get out of it, and let them use it at their own pace and in their own way," he says. "If you do that, they're going to train themselves and they're going to have a heightened awareness of the learning resources at their disposal so that they could facilitate their own ongoing learning."

Be specific about describing desired goals and results. Also make sure you give the assigned jobs to them by name. "Ideally, you want to help them organize their job in terms of daily goals and results," says Tulgan. "Don't micromanage them, but help them micromanage themselves."

Give them the right kind of feedback. Tulgan uses the acronym F.A.S.T. to explain. "When I produce my daily result, tell me frequently, accurately, specifically, and timely. Tell us what we should be doing and what we should do differently." Also avoid six-month and one-year reviews. "They mean absolutely nothing to Generation X," says Tulgan. "I've not interviewed a Generation Xer about their experience in the workplace who hasn't said, 'Oh yeah that's a joke.'"

Reward them with empowerment and responsibility. Generation Xers are more interested in responsibility and creative freedom than in money. "If they're doing stuff right, then it makes sense to increase their responsibilities," he says. "That's just good management. There's more than money at the bottom line."

Tulgan calls this approach a "self-building loop," which allows managers to adjust the way in which work is getting done without lessening the output. This assuages the Xers' deep-seeded concern of getting "X'ed" off the payroll. "They're acutely aware of the lack of the job security," he says. "If you manage their work in this way, then you allow them to create their own career security, which is no longer available in today's economy." Says U.S. 1's resident Generation Xer: Phatly put, dude.

Job Fairs

At most job fairs the emphasis is on getting as many prospective employees out to meet a fair number of employers, who may or may not have any job openings. But an alternative is here: A job fair that wants employees to get placed — on site. This is being hosted by Robert Half Accountemps, the financial and accountant placement firm, which hosts its Spring '96 Job Fair at the Hyatt, Wednesday, May 29, 10 a.m. Call 609-951-2232 for more information.

Robert Ivanicki, the general manager of Robert Half Accountemps, which recently moved into Forrestal Village, says that the fair could have between 40 and 60 job openings for candidates, and is being held for two reasons. "We're going to try and get as many people that are qualified a job right away," he says. "We want the candidates to know that we are here in Princeton working with many of the top firms." The second purpose is "to give our clients a promotional discount to recruit with us," says Ivanicki. "We're able to draw higher-qualified candidates in the finance and accounting fields."

Two more traditional job seeking events for the masses are happening. The first is the Raritan Valley College Career Fair, is Saturday, May 25, 10 a.m. More than a hundred companies are planning to attend, including Accountants on Call, MetLife, Relational Options, UPS, and the IRS. Call 908-231-8803. The Mercer County College fair happens Friday, June 21, 8 a.m. It throws 1,100 job prospects

Banks and Factors

For five years, banks have looked for ways to increase their market share. In February, 1990, when the recession and credit crunch hit simultaneously, banks decreased loans to small business, and cash hungry entrepreneurs found other ways to raise money. Some turned to "factoring," the process by which a lender buys your accounts receivable, gives you almost all the money up front, then collects the accounts and takes a commission (termed a discount).

Now banks are getting into the factoring business, with a hybrid program basing loans on accounts receivable. Carnegie Bank has announced just such a program, billed as "a state of the art accounts receivable financing program designed for growing businesses to increase cash flow while saving time and money."

"Our Business/Manager program," says Carnegie's president Thomas L. Gray Jr., "is made for companies that could not qualify for a line of credit but have creditworthy receivables."

"The traditional factor," says Gray, "buys the receivable and owns it. He bought it at a discount and that's his whole deal. With the Business/Manager program, the bank has an ongoing relationship with the customer."

Carnegie aims this program at firms with $100,000 or more in annual accounts receivable. Say you get a manufacturing contract worth $10,000 and you need to buy materials. The bank agrees to take a four percent discount and gives you $9,600 right away. You deposit 10 percent of that, or $960, in an interest bearing account at Carnegie Bank. Then the bank bills your client, and your client sends payments to the bank box number or "lockbox." If your client does not pay the bank in 90 days (or the agreed upon time) then you have to repay the bank.

Maybe you would have enough in your "reserve" account to cover it. If this $10,000 deal is just one of many, you might. But if you don't have the money, you and the bank go through the financing process again — the bank takes four percent, you deposit 10 percent, and so on.

The bank manages the customer billing at no extra cost, says Lynn M. Kozic, the program's director, and can provide up to 50 useful reports, such as aged receivables, customer activity, order frequency. Kozic knows of one firm that was planning to hire a bookkeeper but — after signing on with this report-producing program — was able to cancel the hire.

In price and in theory the hybrid program is halfway between factoring and a loan. A factor might discount the accounts receivable at 10 percent, and using the receivables as collateral might result in a loan that is one, two, or three percent above prime. The hybrid program might be priced at four or five percent.

"The only thing that makes it factoring," says Gray, "is that the bank is looking at the accounts receivable as opposed to the financial health of the company."

Carnegie has a six-month "exclusive" on this program in this area. Based in Tennessee, the Central Jersey "franchise" used to be "owned" by Flemington Bank, but Flemington was bought by UJB (Summit Bancorporation).

"We were introduced to the program by Garrett Bromley," says Gray, "whom we hired when Flemington closed in February. He told us about the Business/Manager Program." Gray then hired Kozic, another Flemington banker, to set up the program for Carnegie, and it has generated more than $3 million in financing since February.

One insider in the factoring industry — who declined to be quoted by name — predicts that, within five years, every bank will operate a similar factor-type program. "But it requires a different kind of mentality than your typical loan officer has. It's a different animal, and it's a little foreign to them. But they sell insurance, and insurance isn't lending either."

For information on Carnegie's Business Manager program, call Kozic at 609-520-0601.

Microloans

Start-ups that need "small" infusions of cash are often out of luck when it comes to asking a bank for the money. The rescue: the Business Owners Institute, a Bridgewater-based for-profit venture that is offering micro-loans — of $5,000 or less — to its members. The program is being co-sponsored by a long distance telephone service provider, Star-Tel Communications. The money comes from the Institute's coffers, and will be loaned at what it claim will be competitive interest rates with short payback periods.

The Institute provides an array of services and products for small businesses, from start-ups to $10 million-a-year firms and was started in 1994 as a private-sector alternative to Small Business Development Centers, it has 256 members and six offices in New Jersey (the closest is in Cranbury). A new program is the New Jersey Business Legal Plan, which offers members personal or business legal solutions. Membership costs $100 per year. For more information, call 908-526-1500.

The Ruotolo Scholarship, in memory of Andrew "Drew" K. Ruotolo Jr., creator of the Union County Child Advocacy Center, has broader guidelines. Applicants may be New Jersey residents accepted for admission to either an accredited law school or graduate school. For applications call the County Prosecutors Association of New Jersey Foundation at 609-984-0051.

Kilowatts for Dollars

Some electric companies are so eager to reduce the number of new power plants that they are willing to give businesses money for sucking up less juice. ETS recently announced that it qualified for PSE&G's "Standard Offer" program, which pays rebates to companies that successfully shed at least 100 kilowatt hours in prime summertime.

The firm subcontracted the Atlantic City-based Energy Conservation Allies to retrofit over 11,000 lighting fixtures in 11 buildings on its Rosedale Road campus. The project would reduce ETS' energy consumption by 950,000 kilowatt hours and save the company $145,000 per year in energy bills. Also, ETS is receiving 10 yearly $175,000 rebates from PSE&G. Burt Baron, ETS' director of facilities and property management, says "the investment will pay for itself in less than three years. After that, it's found money. We'd be foolish not to do something like this."

Also the new energy-efficient systems aren't going to be a strain on the eyes. Baron claims that the light is 23 percent brighter and easier on the eye because the color rendition is closer to the sun's spectrum. ETS employers have reportedly given the environmentally-friendly lighting good reviews too.

The concept of energy retrofitting for cash rebates is no spring chicken though. It was first reported in U.S. 1 March 30, 1994, when Rhone-Poulenc replaced 12,000 lights with energy efficient lights, ballasts, and reflectors and reclaimed mercury in old fluorescent lamps at its Black Horse Lane and Cranbury locations. It received a similar cash incentive from Jersey Central Power & Light, which reduced the investment of $400,000 to a net $285,000, which would be earned back through rebates and savings in two years.

To have a retrofit done, firms usually need help with financing and doing the energy audits, as well as the installation, which can be done by an electrical contractor. To get started, call the power company. For PSE&G marketing services, call 800-832-0076, for Jersey Central Power & Light, call 800-662-3115.

Credit Checks: At the Strip Mall?

Yes it's true: Next time you're picking up reams of laser printer paper or comparing mousepads, you'll also to be able to check a client's credit too. This is courtesy of Dun & Bradstreet, which is deploying interactive kiosks in Office Depot Megastores. The nearest is on Route 1 South in North Brunswick.

"There is a phone at the kiosk and you're able to directly talk with a Dun & Bradstreet representative with it," says Mike Azzi, a Dun & Bradstreet Information Services public relations manager, based in Murray Hill.

The Dun & Bradstreet database, which is touch screen-activated, supplies data on 11 million businesses, including creditworthiness, likelihood of payment, management background, and financial strength analysis. A business information report, which gives users public records, lien suits and judgments against the company, management background, and the all-famous credit report and rating, costs $75. Customized mail marketing lists are also available, starting at $15. The results are faxed through the machine.

Transactions are paid for by credit card number beforehand, and there is a broad range for products obtained through the kiosk. For more information, call 800-TRY-1DNB.

'Doll House' Revisited

What makes a play a classic? In his lecture at Princeton in March, director Peter Sellars — maverick reinterpreter of Shakespeare and Mozart — made a strong case for the classic's continued capacity to shock. Addressing a remark to conservative activist William Bennett (The Book of Virtues), Sellars announced: "Here's your canon, Mr. Bennett, and it's pointed right at you."

Like Sellars, director Emily Mann made a mark early in her career as a mover and a thinker of the theater. In the late 1970s, she developed her craft at Minneapolis's prestigious Guthrie Theater, becoming a director of its main stage. She has long known how to mobilize political themes in literary gems, and the Ibsen canon has been an important part of her terrain. Taking a fresh look at the curmudgeonly Norwegian playwright, her La Jolla Playhouse production of "Hedda Gabler," which imbued Hedda with ample heroic dimension, caused a sensation. Now at McCarter Theater, her production of Ibsen's 1879, "A Doll House" (originally presented at the Hartford Stage) is generating a deluge of favorable attention. Adding blush to the current excitement is the news that next season at McCarter she'll tackle Ibsen's "Master Builder."

U.S. 1's critic, Simon Saltzman, credited Mann's production with raising Ibsen's classic to a new plateau. Particularly impressed with Cynthia Nixon in the role of Nora, Saltzman wrote: "Nixon keeps us spellbound with expectation. In this production, our expectations are always exceeded."

In the New York Times, Alvin Klein also focuses on Mann's success with the script. "The McCarter is serving the whole bill of fare — three acts, three hours — in a lucid translation by Gerry Bamman and Irene B. Berman, and Ms. Mann has made of it a banquet of boundless stimulation." Writing of Nixon, he adds, "...whatever the actor's technique in building up to Nora's awareness that she is a caged songbird, it is so pure and ineffable that the effect induces tears for every relationship out there in the dark."

"Although Ibsen's play has come to stand for a philosophical tract," writes Klein, "it is, in intent, a drama about self-worth, about a family in upheaval. Ms Mann's all-embracing view is not a calculated reinvention; it emerges as a true restoration."

In the Star-Ledger, Peter Filichia gives the lion's share of credit to Nixon's performance, opening his review with the words, "Nixon's the one!" He writes: "As Nora, the wife who ultimately slams the door on her misguided husband, Torvald, Nixon has opened a new door on her career. Taking on one of the great classic roles in the canon, Nixon wins."

In Town Topics, William McCleery describes Nixon as "an amusing actress" who drew "laugh after laugh from the opening night audience." Interested in the play's language then and now, he notes that "Nora's pre-walkout speech to Torvald sounded so contemporary to us that we wondered if it had been updated, but a post-theater check of the 1906 version showed no evident changes."

Nineties' Nora: Cynthia Nixon garners accolades as Nora in Emily Mann's production. 609-683-8000.

Writing in the Princeton Packet's Time Off, Stuart Duncan notes that the highly touted Bamman-Berman translation is not much different from past productions. "What's different," he writes, "is the extraordinary performance of Cynthia Nixon as Nora. From beginning to end, from spoiled child to woman scorned, Ms. Nixon reaches towering heights."

Almost every critic has weighed in with an opinion on Mann's supposed name change from "A Doll's House" to "A Doll House." In a program note, Zelda Fichandler provides the most surprising note with the information that with the title of his play, "Et Dukkehjem," Ibsen actually introduced a new-minted word into the Norwegian language. However, to add our own pedestrian note: In England the toy house inhabited by a family of toy figures that is known in America as "a dollhouse" is called "a doll's house."

Isn't it simply true that the play's first English translators were writing in that nation's vernacular and not America's, and Mann has simply updated the title to reflect local common parlance? As Mann completes her sixth McCarter season, if she has proved anything, it is surely that she speaks our language.

Black Sheep, Second Stage

When a family dubs one of its members "a black sheep" it's usually because they've shaken things up a bit. The black sheep may be spurned or feared, but he or she is invariably part of the equation that make families function the way they do.

A self-appointed black sheep of central New Jersey's theatrical family is the Blacksheep Theater Company, a six-member group now launching its third peripatetic season. Having produced work since 1993 in Somerset and Edison, Blacksheep begins a three-play season at the Second Stage at George Street in New Brunswick.

The season opens Friday, May 24, with "Beirut," an adult drama by Alan Bowne, directed by Doug Eaton. Next comes a reworking of "Last Licks" by Frank D. Gilroy, June 14 to July 7. And the season concludes with the 19th-century German classic "Woyzeck" by Karl Georg Buchner, July 19 to August 4. Performances are Fridays and Saturdays at 8 p.m., and Sundays at 2 p.m.

Michael Hodson is a typical Blacksheep member. A computer consultant by day and an actor by night, he has also been thrust into the role of producer for the group's upcoming season. Speaking after hours from his home in Summit, he says both the group's composition and its name are a product of its members' collective experiences.

"We're a group of people who have been in theater for 15 to 20 years and have come together through common interests," says Hodson. "After a number of years working in other theaters, we all felt a little bit on the outside. None of us had settled down and become part of a single community theater, so we decided to form our own."

Blacksheep's members have all been active in area community theaters and may be familiar to many. Company members, in addition to Hodson, are B.J. Welsh, David Welsh, Doug Eaton, John Hickson, Denise Hickson. Like many in the acting business, these collaborators subsist on mundane day jobs. The ensemble comprises a mail carrier, a locksmith, a house husband, a tavern owner, and a executive secretary.

"We claim as our vision the concept of theater with a provocative edge," says Hodson. "We try to do shows that are not normally done here — shows for which there is not much opportunity in this area."

Blacksheep's premiere production was "Angst Can Be Fun," a selection of one-acts by Samuel Beckett, Christopher Durang, and Lanford Wilson, staged in 1993 at the Edison Valley Playhouse. This was followed in 1994 by "My Sister in This House," a dark play about incest and insanity by Wendy Kesselman that won the company an A.C.T. Award.

Blacksheep's upcoming season, its most ambitious to date, promises to remain true to its regional status as "outsider" theater. However Hodson hopes that the group's itinerant days may be passed. "In the past we've rented space where theaters had space available, but we're hoping that this arrangement at George Street will be more permanent." During the regular season, George Street uses this second stage as rehearsal space. During the off-season, movable risers with seating for 99 transform the room into an intimate stage space.

Blacksheep's opening production, "Beirut," takes for its symbolic title the name of a city notorious as a distressed and anarchic war zone. The setting is a plague-ridden New York, where victims of illness are segregated as in a war zone. A love story, it explores the conflicts of a couple divided by the unnamed plague.

War Zone: Victor Barbella and Christina Kirkland play a conflicted couple in Blacksheep Theater's 'Beirut' at Second Stage at George Street through June 9. 908-846-2895.

"They are punished for their illness," says director Doug Eaton, "to the point where they must risk death to feel alive. It's both a horror story of government indifference taken to its logical conclusion, and a love story of courage and hope for a better life." Victor Barbella plays the man named Torch, Christina Kirkland plays his lover, named Blue, and John Hickson is the guard.

The second play is "Last Licks," by Frank D. Gilroy, who won a Pulitzer for "The Subject Was Roses." This later work ran briefly in New York. "It's an intimate play that was done in a large house in New York," explains Hodson. "It didn't work. Yet it should have worked. It just needed the right handling and the right place to stage it."

Kimothy Cruse, who directs frequently at Off-Broadstreet Theater in Hopewell, is working with Gilroy to revise what the author still considers a workable script. He also directs "Last Licks."

"Woyzeck" was selected by director Doug Eaton, who is also an opera lover, as the third drama. Familiar with the searing story, Eaton went in search of its source. Buchner died in 1837 at the age of 24, leaving the tragedy unfinished. Various translators have fleshed it out, and the translation selected here is by John Mackendrick. "There's really no definitive text," says Hodson, "so it's somewhat open to interpretation." The play presents the life of a simple army private who finds that everyone wants to control his life. A lowly cog in a cruel and rigid social machine, Woyzeck is a victim in the true sense of the work. The play dissects the soul and psyche of the hapless soldier.

Hodson is optimistic that area audiences are ready to take a long, hard look at their world through the lens of theater. He says: "We're looking for people who are willing to be provoked, who are looking for more than a show-stopping tune they can whistle when they leave the theater."

Who Critiques the Critic?

Let's face it, it is much easier to be a critic than a playwright, to pick a play apart than to put one together.

It seems only fair that a critic should at some point put up or shut up and place an original work before the public eye. I am happy to report that a fellow journalist has done just this.

Off-Broadstreet Theater is currently featuring the world premiere of "Anne Herndon," a story of romance and reincarnation, written by Laura Haywood, a former critic for the Princeton Packet, the Trentonian, and the Bridgewater Courier News.

A former Hopewell resident, Haywood left New Jersey and its newspapers and moved to Florida eight years ago, just about the same time I moved in and joined up. Haywood continues to cover theater in Jacksonville and, under the name Alice Laurance, she has edited anthologies of mystery and science fiction. She has published her poetry in newspapers and magazines, and is the author of the novel, "A Third Glimpse of Hell." She also works in public relations for AT&T.

Now Haywood is back in her new "incarnation" as a budding playwright, and it falls to others to pick apart her play. To be honest, this script needs work. "Anne Herndon" needs less talk and more action, less foreshadowing and far more shadows.

Haywood does put some provocative theatrical ideas on the table. For example, she wants to talk about the lasting stigma of sex abuse charges. We meet Mackie Allen, a popular psychologist who has lost both his professional life and the custody of his son due to one such an allegation by a teenaged patient. The consequences of the charges linger long after the boy has recanted. We see Allen try to reestablish himself as radio personality, under this alias, in small-town Georgia.

Haywood also raises a far less universal problem, one faced only by professional writers, of writer's block. We meet one such best-selling author, novelist Libby Carter, whose need for counseling leads her to seek out Mackie's services — unless it was some other reason. For here Haywood raises the issue of reincarnation, a controversial subject but one with great dramatic potential. We meet two women writers from the past and come to see how deeply they cared for one another. These authors, both dead, seem somehow to have reappeared in the souls of the living Allen and Carter.

Bob Thick supplies an engaging cast and a versatile set, so that we can begin to see just what works and what could work better. A good romance requires a handsome couple, and Jerry Dunn, as Allen, supplies the production with one intelligent and sensitive (and did I say handsome?) leading man. Playing opposite Dunn is the equally attractive Laura Jackson, as the talented but troubled writer Libby. Donna Sorrento and Pat Echeverria play Judity Barrows and Kate Gideon, the mysterious authors from the past, bringing to the stage the aura of an earlier time.

Balancing the earnestness of these two relationships are two characters played by actors with abundant talent for humor. Curtis Kaine plays the radio co-host Ray Bassett, with two voices, an upbeat one for "on-the-air" and a droll one for "off." Catherine Rowe plays Libby's friend and nurse Luana Perkins with delightful feistiness.

Haywood supplies an abundance of ideas, a variety of characters, and some fine moments, both of dramatic pause and comic relief. It's enjoyable to be with these characters; unfortunately we just don't get to know them. So now it's time to get out the blue pencil and start to edit. With more use of the overlapping of scenes past and present, Haywood could heighten the sense of paranormal possibility while amplifying images of a more repressed era in the South. The more the author allows us to see past tragedies in flashbacks, rather than just telling about them, the more she allows us to care about these individuals. After all, every great story has a great villain, so show us your pathological liars and your scheming lawyers.

Few critics attempt the transition from critic to playwright and far fewer succeed when they do, George Bernard Shaw being one of the shining exceptions. I hope Haywood keeps trying, and perhaps one day we will be saying, "By Jove, I think she's got it!"

Singing in the Sun

Stage Setting: Seats are set at Princeton Forrestal Center for an outdoor concert. The season begins this week at the first of four area venues.

Although winter woolens are by no means a thing of the past — some of us are still reluctant to put them away — the summer music season is, theoretically, here again. Four area organizations have published concert schedules that begin this week and simply hum with the promise of long, lazy days ahead. And at this cool juncture between spring and summer, even the occasional hum of a mosquito would seem welcome.

Summer music brings people together and unites them in common rhythms. Mercer County Parks brings residents together for Saturday night blanket parties that move indoors to the ice rink in case of rain. At Carnegie Center, noontime concerts on the Greenway throughout the summer months bring workers out from under the fluorescent lights and transform an office park into a village green. Retail associations at Princeton Shopping Center and Forrestal Village likewise invite shoppers to take a break and just listen. And whether it's the soothing sound of Cheryl Cunningham's harp strings, the bombast of the Giants of Jazz, or the Dixieland sound of the Pete Nictakis Band, music under clear skies can be the elixir that gives us strength to face less hospitable seasons ahead.

Princeton Forrestal Village, Route 1, 609-799-7400. This summer outdoor music series takes place every Thursday at 6 p.m.

Broadway Dramas

'Seven Guitars'

The mood is sad, purposefully mournful at the beginning of August Wilson's fine new drama (his seventh), "Seven Guitars." There's even a weepy look to the worn stone and brick walls that face the backyard of a dusky-lit Pittsburgh dwelling (atmospherically designed by Scott Bradley and lit by Christopher Akerlind). Here we meet a gathering of several reflective and grieving characters. The time is 1948. Although the play begins following the death — actually the murder — of Floyd (Keith David), a blues singer-guitarist on the verge of his first big commercial success, there is a quick shift back in time to Floyd's recent return to his friends and to his old boarding house.

Wilson doesn't cloud the intimation that one of these people is the murderer. But there is more than a simple who-done-it mystery going on in this play from the author who has been so imaginatively chronicling the African-American experience in America decade by decade. Suspects all, but hardly villainous, they have each carved their revengeful natures out of a still-enslaved society. This, even as they vent their anger in often humorous ways.

But, is Vera (Viola Davis), whom Floyd callously deserted for another woman, willing to forgive and take the repentant ex-lover back now that the other woman has left him following his being jailed for vagrancy? Do Floyd's former, volatile side men, Canewell (Ruben Santiago-Hudson) and Red Carter (Tommy Hollis), though armed with both instruments and weapons, have old and new axes to grind? Can the sassy landlady Louise (Michelle Shay) control the provocations unleashed by her pregnant runaway niece Ruby (Rosalyn Coleman)? And how much stock do we take in the ranting and ravings of West Indian Hedley (Roger Robinson), who slaughters chickens for a living amidst his biblical and mythical visions?

Just as the potential for a heroic life infiltrates the backyard drama — a broadcast of a Joe Louis boxing match — the trail of speeches, of which there are many and of an impassioned nature, lift the characters out of the particular and into the rare. Here, the gift of ruminating and waxing eloquent on one's life is every characters' gift. It is also Wilson's forte to bring lyrical realism, as in an aria, to the drama. The strength of "Seven Guitars" is not in its plot, but in its hypnotic and poetic postures. This is brought to life through the stirring and intense staging by Lloyd Richards, matched by brilliant ensemble acting. ★★★★

Seven Guitars, Walter Kerr Theater, 219 West 48th Street.

'Delicate Balance'

Edward Albee talks a very good play. Lucky for us that he can also write one. Of course, Eliza Doolittle would love to jump into any one of the talky scenes in "A Delicate Balance" and sing "Don't talk of love, don't talk of trees, don't talk at all, show me." From "Who's Afraid of Virginia Wolf" to "Three Tall Women," Albee has demonstrated time and time again that his dialogue is enough. That it prompts us to use words in response like "profound," "provocative," "forceful," "witty," and "abrasive" would seem quite enough of a tribute.

What Albee doesn't seem to give a rat's ass about in "A Delicate Balance" is theatricality. But the author can rest assured that the brilliant cast, under the direction of Gerald Gutierrez (responsible for last year's sensational revival of "The Heiress"), will attend to this matter very well. One can rightfully suspect watching the play unfold, that Albee wants everything to be exactly as it in this elusive drama about detachment, alienation, and loneliness.

For those of us who treasure theatrical memories and specifically theatrical moments, certainly Jessica Tandy's performance as Agnes in the original 1966 Broadway production is right up there. But so is Nancy Marchand's, so stunning in the same role, but this time in a McCarter Theater production 17 years later. The moments I'm referring to are not the interminably long dissertations on fear, madness, and loneliness that test the listener's interest and attention long before they are over, but the drama of the silences that separate the speeches.

Now appearing in the role of Agnes is Rosemary Harris who continues a tradition of being a powerfully communicative presence. But, being a Harris fan way back to her repertory days with APA Phoenix up to her recent Broadway role in "An Inspector Calls," I know I can always expect and get more than I bargained for. I wasn't disappointed. Harris makes her moves and takes her positions either on a sofa or an easy chair with such calculating propensity as to make the listener, whether on stage or out front, quake. Harris proceeds to construct a fantasy on the expediency of madness. The words build and flow with almost hallucinatory enthusiasm as she slowly paints an oblique picture of her dull, middle-aged life.

George Grizzard plays Tobias her husband. And his performance also finds a moldy grandeur in the character that may have eluded me before. True, Tobias is so withdrawn from life that his presence, while poignantly distressing, is tantamount, in itself, to madness. But add to this the face of Grizzard who affects such a sense of pained urgency and imminent crack-up as to keep one ready to race onstage with a straitjacket.

The words build and flow with almost hallucinatory enthusiasm as Harris slowly paints an oblique picture of her dull, middle-aged life.

There is no question that the role of Claire, Agnes' drunken sister, who hangs around their home, it seems, just to drink martinis and be nasty to everyone within reach, has never had a more convincing interpreter than Elaine Stritch. Stritch has made a career of being so good, so consistently, that it hurts. Well, it's almost more fun than we have any right to to watch the staggeringly brilliant Stritch let the full force of Claire's vindictive stings disorient the WASP-ish decorum of the disintegrating household.

Mary Beth Hurt is excellent as the spoiled, divorced daughter currently in the throes of another separation. Her tantrums upon returning to the womb are a joy. These are set off by Mom and Dad's best friends and neighbors, Edna and Harry, who have moved into her bedroom. Elizabeth Wilson and John Carter are wonderfully spooky in the somewhat mystifying roles of two people who suddenly became scared, just scared, as they sat alone in their own home.

Gathered together in apprehensive fear, these desperately lost people spend the weekend asking questions, both rhetorically and of each other, on the nature of their condition. Nothing much really happens to them, but a lot happens to us. This, in the presence of superb actors exploring hollowness of character straight down to the bottom of their martini glasses.

In all Albee's plays, his characters, women especially, make strong, individual statements. Dimension doesn't seem to play as great a part as does intensity. Leave the dimension in this case to set designer John Lee Beatty who awes us well beyond the living room of a well-appointed suburban house. And credit again to director Gutierrez, in this Lincoln Center Theater production, for making sure that no one says anything that he or she doesn't embody at every moment. ★★★

'Sleeping with the Enemy'

To some men the film "Sleeping with the Enemy" seemed to go way overboard, a highly exaggerated view of an abusive marriage. The successful-looking 30-something man holds his young wife (Julia Roberts) a virtual hostage in his beautiful beach home. He micro manages her so closely, he even flies into a rage when she forgets to straighten the guest towels in the bathroom. When she finally manages to run away and change her identity, he tracks her down with a gun.

Pennington resident Courtney Esposito has studied domestic violence and finds the movie frighteningly plausible. "Domestic violence crosses all class lines," says Esposito, who has long worked as a counselor of victims of domestic violence with Womanspace, the Mercer County shelter. "For the abuser, it's all about control."

At 10 p.m. on Tuesday, May 28, area residents can hear Esposito recount her experiences on New Jersey Network television, when she appears with a panel of experts on domestic violence. The panel discussion follows the 9 p.m. preview broadcast of the daring new PBS special, "Domestic Violence: Faces of Fear." The PBS special, hosted by Diane Sawyer, airs nationally on Thursday, May 30, at 10 p.m.

One of the most startling and important points made in the PBS documentary is the fact that leaving a violent relationship places the victim in serious jeopardy. Some women are killed as soon as they leave their partner. Esposito is adamant on this point. "People look at a victim of domestic abuse will often ask me why victims don't just leave abusive husbands? I say, well, Nicole (Simpson) left."

Esposito speaks not only from her experiences working with victims but also from first-hand experience. Twenty-five years ago, her first husband abused her when he drank. It was not until he held a knife to her throat that she decided to leave.

Still, Esposito says that any friend or counselor must always remember to let the victim make her own choice whether to leave or stay. Says Esposito, "Only she knows what is safest for her and her children. She has lived with the problem, and she alone should decide when to leave."

When Esposito decided to leave, she also made another decision, fully comprehending its risks. She decided not to spend her new life in hiding. Instead, she has dedicated herself to helping others trapped in abusive situations. Today she lectures on the subject to different groups, sharing her harrowing experiences of death threats and stalking, events that transpired two decades ago but remain vivid in her memory. She even gives out her home phone number in case anyone in the audience is secretly considering counseling for themselves or friends.

Esposito serves on the board of Womanspace, the shelter and counseling service started 18 years ago with the help of then Princeton Borough mayor Barbara Boggs Sigmund. Sigmund also made a point of donating the fees she earned for performing weddings to the shelter, a way of reminding the newlyweds to not be blind to the possibility that violence can surface in the best of homes. Today, the current mayor of Princeton Township, Michelle Tuck, carries on the same tradition, but the problem defies resolution. According to statistics released by the New Jersey Department of Law and Public Safety, domestic violence complaints are up by seven percent. This persistent problem demands attention and prevention.

Women as strong as Esposito have survived abusive relationships, a fact can serve as a powerful source of hope for others. Would that they never had to.

Muddy's Main Man

Implicit in the blues is the struggle, which, for some bluesmen, is not an abstraction at all but an unkind reality that threatens not only their livelihood but their opportunity to express their hardship in musical terms. Few know more about this than Willie "Big Eyes" Smith, a veteran drummer of the Chicago blues scene, who has had a heck of a time staying afloat in an industry that's known for its wealth of inspiration and lack of remuneration for its artists. Over the course of his 43-year career, Smith has hit skins for everybody from Muddy Waters to Bo Diddley to the Legendary Blues Band to Eric Clapton, supporting himself and his family during dry periods between by working odd jobs.

Up until now Smith has always been a sideman, but now his time in the spotlight has arrived with the release of a debut solo effort, "Bag Full of Blues." Fans will get to hear Smith at the Old Bay Restaurant's Bourbon Street Cafe in New Brunswick, Friday, May 24, at 10 p.m. It's going to be a b-l-u-e-s show, exclusively, he warns, warmly. "The ones that come to hear the blues, and especially the ones that come to hear me, they know it's going to be blues," he says. "It's blues on blues. I didn't come here to play funk or rock."

Shortly before a telephone interview from his Chicago home, Smith had been toiling over an unreliable starter in his red 1984 Chevy van. Is this the tour bus? "Most likely," he replies. "Unless something good happens." He laughs without bitterness at the irony. His irony. In his fifth decade of music, the man who has shared stages with the Bachs, Beethovens, and Beatles of the blues world is still waiting for his big break.

At age 60, Smith, who talks in a bluesy cadence as if the story of his life were one long lyric, informs us that he no longer has the safety net of a day job to fall back on. "Ain't nobody gonna hire me now," he says. "I used to cook in a restaurant, I did construction, I drove trucks, I did everything. When the music business got bad I always had an ace in the hole that I could always pick up. You know how this music business is. Now I ain't got no choice but to play."

Smith was born in 1936 and raised by his grandparents who were cotton farmers in Helena, Arkansas, the hometown of Sonny Boy Williamson (the first). "I always wanted to play from a baby on up," Smith says. "But I couldn't afford the instruments I wanted to play." In the summer of 1953, he ventured up to Chicago to visit his mother, Lizzie, a blues enthusiast, who took him to a club called the Zanzibar to hear Muddy Waters. It was there that the 17-year-old decided to stay and learn harmonica instead of returning to pick cotton in Arkansas. Within a year, Smith had his own band and was gigging at various clubs in Chicago, and by 1955, coinciding with his first honeymoon, Smith sat in on Bo Diddley's seminal Chess recordings, "Diddey Wah Diddey" and "Who Do You Love." But he didn't join Diddley's touring band. He recalls, "I had just gotten married so I wasn't thinking of going anywhere."

Somewhere in this period Smith had switched over to drums, and his trademark shuffle beat attracted an offer to play as an understudy to Muddy Waters' drummer, "Mojo" Buford. By 1961 Smith had a full time gig with Muddy Waters' band. Yet despite the legendary status this laurel would eventually bring, Smith's memories of the time are of financial insolvency and hardship. "When I first started with Muddy in '61 things were tough. We were really struggling. When he did get a gig going out three months, I told him I wasn't going, because I was driving a cab and I was making more money in one day that I would in one week of playing music. Even Muddy wasn't making it. What happened is, after rock 'n roll took over, blues took a back seat."

But the experience with Waters did seal Smith's fate as a bluesman. "I always loved the blues, but I would suppose if I hadn't been playing with Muddy, I would have been playing everything else," he says. "I came up under the old school. The only thing I needed to do was settle down, and he taught me that." He compares his solid musical abilities then to those of his 22 year-old son Kenneth, one of his five children, a student and drummer who gigs seven nights a week. "He's young but he's up on his act," says Smith, although the Kennedy King College junior won't join any traveling bands until he finishes school.

The object of "Bag Full of Blues" was to build on the tradition championed by Muddy Waters and such peers as Elmore James and Howlin' Wolf. Waters, the harmonica-playing legend from Rolling Fork, Mississippi, brought the blues from its solo, acoustic berth in the Deep South to Chicago, where he "urbanized" it by adding electric instruments. Smith seeks to update Waters' spirit — without upsetting its laconic phrasing. "Muddy made it brand new again," says Smith. "There's no way that I can do that cause it's already been done. Those guys were just like the prophets, I'm just like a disciple trying to carry the message."

What was playing with Muddy like? Smith recalls: "Other than being tough times, it was fun. I was a young man and getting a chance to travel, and it was an honor. Those were the types of things that didn't happen every day and I loved doing what I was doing and the main thing was being part of the wheel. At the time, I would call him the pioneer. You had people out there like Elmore Hames and Lighting Hopkins. Those were the people that really brought the newer sound out. A lot of those older songs that Muddy did, people like Son House had done by themselves."

Smith's solo project came about after a seminal collaboration — a blues "supergroup" known as the Legendary Blues Band — broke up. The band included blues notables Pinetop Perkins, Louis Meyers, Calvin Jones, and Jerry Portnoy. In four albums and lots of exposure, its influential sound transcended the boundaries between blues and rock 'n roll, winning six Grammys while backing up blues greats Buddy Guy, Howlin' Wolf, and Junior Wells, and rock stars like Bob Dylan, the Rolling Stones, and Eric Clapton. The group jammed with Muddy Waters on the soundtrack to "The Last Waltz," the Martin Scorsese ("Raging Bull," "Goodfellas") documentary about the Band's star-studded farewell concert. (The Band featured Garth Hudson and Robbie Robertson and got its break playing behind Dylan.)

But perhaps the Legendary Blues Band's most recognizable role was as John Lee Hooker's supporting cast in that famous manic street scene in the hit movie, "The Blues Brothers." By casting famous Chicago musicians in awkward roles — Ray Charles as a music store owner, Matt Guitar Murphy as a short order cook, and Aretha Franklin as his waitress wife — this film epitomized the dilemma faced by musicians who have had to compromise their talents by working menial jobs to make ends meet.

The Legendary Blues Band disintegrated after four years, when Perkins decided to do a solo project (on which Smith is currently helping him write songs). Smith, who had spent his lifetime as a backup guy, was suddenly thrust into the position of being a band leader — again, after 40 years. "I was happy being a side man," he says. "I found it hard get people to rehearse." By comparison, the old lean days now seemed cushy. "When I was with Muddy, he had to do all of the struggling," he says.

But the end product of this struggle, the "Bag Full of Blues" recording, is a testament of a bluesman who has lived the blues. It is Delta Blues played Chicago style, as during its heyday in the 1950s, but with an upgrade in sound quality. Steady, untainted, and mobile, the music shambles in and around the classic blues patterns without diverting into derivative genres. The shimmer and wail of the harmonica, the crisp enunciations, and the tactile grooves in the ubiquitous moderato somehow effect those tingly sensations that travel up the spine and calm the urge to brood.

Smith includes seven of his own songs on the CD, but without the playlist it would be hard to identify which songs were originals, they're so standard. On "Hard, Hard Way," Smith recalls the tale of a working man forsaking his art in order to eat, singing, "I like to make a livin' layin' down these blues, but it's a hard, hard way to make the money I need to make." In "Hard Times," he croons, "If you ain't a stone pony, hard times will bust your vest." Covers include McKinley Morganfield's "Baby Please Don't Go," Chester Burnett's "Tired of Crying," and "Sure As You Live," a timeless mantra for the spurned lover.

The band that recorded "Bag" consists of Jimmy Sutton on upright bass, Pinetop Perkins on piano, Ross Bonn and Kim Wilson on harp, three guitarists: Gareth Best, James Wheeler, and Nick Moss, and Smith, playing drums and belting out the lyrics in a clear, unpretentious voice. Smith says he'll be playing with a different group at the Old Bay.

The tunes on the CD were written a year before its release, rehearsed in Smith's basement over a period of weeks, and recorded in two days last October — a far cry from the arduous and primitive recording techniques practice during the 1950s, when Smith recorded the Chess Records cuts with Bo Diddley. "Recording was really hard work then," he says. "You did it the way they wanted to do it. Sooner or later you were going to feel it. They would pump you until you were mad and you got it right. Whatever your best was, that's what they was gonna get."

Lacking an agent, Smith is relying on a small, eight-employee blues record label — the San Francisco-based Blind Pig Records — and a part-time manager in New York to promote the CD. "Everybody tells me how good the record is," Smith says. "But gigs are still hard to come by. They always say good things come to those who wait, but that's all I can do. I just wait. One of these days I'll be at the right place at the right time. That's all it is for everybody — being at the right place at the right time." Well, New Brunswick, there's your cue. — Peter J. Mladineo

A Psychiatric Perspective For Legal Matters

Vivian Shnaidman, M.D.

Hiring a forensic psychiatrist for legal cases is about hiring an expert who can effectively evaluate psychiatric considerations and their legal implications, and communicate his or her opinion with confidence and clarity, suggests forensic psychiatrist Vivian Shnaidman, M.D.

"It's not about opening the Yellow Pages and choosing the first psychiatrist who is available or who claims to have expertise in a specific area," says Dr. Shnaidman. A forensic psychiatrist is one who is trained in the application of psychiatry to legal matters. Shnaidman received psychiatric training at Albert Einstein College of Medicine in New York and the State University of New York at Buffalo. She worked at Forensic Mental Health Services of Erie County, New York, and completed the New York University Fellowship Program in Psychiatry and Law.

"There are a number of areas to consider when turning to a psychiatrist for assistance with a case. You need someone who is an experienced clinical psychiatrist, whose training is current and expertise reliable. You want someone who has experience with the legal environment and has the ability to look at the problem, understand it, and explain it to attorneys, judges, and jurors, clearly and concisely and without timidity or hesitance."

Whether for civil or criminal cases, Shnaidman's role is to determine and evaluate psychiatric implications. Dr. Shnaidman consults on civil cases, such as harassment, disability evaluations, psychiatric malpractice, other medical malpractice with psychiatric sequelae, testamentary capacity, and custody and custodial fitness evaluations and has experience with criminal cases, offering her opinion for insanity defenses, diminished capacity, competency to stand trial or to plead (guilty or otherwise), and criminal responsibility, and malpractice cases.

"A forensic psychiatrist can provide a fresh perspective and insight into a legal matter, even before it goes to court," says Shnaidman. Dr. Shnaidman often consults with attorneys on how to structure their cases around present psychiatric evidence, even before they take on a case. "Understanding the psychiatric implications can make it easier to determine if the case has merit." Shnaidman offers attorneys a free brief initial telephone consultation.

Dr. Shnaidman is a board certified clinical psychiatrist and sub-specializes in forensic psychiatry. She provides psychotherapy services for adults, adolescents, families, and couples, and psychopharmacology (medication therapy). She serves on the faculty of the University of Medicine and Dentistry of New Jersey and is on the staff of Cooper Hospital in Camden. Dr. Shnaidman is also in the process of joining the staff of Princeton House, the psychiatric unit of Princeton Hospital.

Pre-Disaster Recovery Planning Is Smart Business

Remote Computer Backup Service • Disaster Recovery Planning

The frightening reality is that every company is vulnerable to data loss – from operator error, a software flaw, fire, flood, theft, or mischievous gnomes. 80% of all computer-dependent businesses do not have an adequate backup plan.

When your business is protected by our remote service, encrypted copies of your critical files are automatically compressed and electronically transferred offsite nightly, where they are available for retrieval by you at any time of the day or night.

Maybe it's time for an investment in yourself

"You look tired." Has this been said about you too often around the office? Does that face in the mirror feel a lot younger that it looks?

If it is time to explore an investment in your appearance...and a new suit isn't enough, you may want to consider cosmetic surgery.

Current techniques in aesthetic surgery such as facial contouring, eyelid surgery and CO^2 laser resurfacing might be right for you. You can look more youthful in a safe and natural way. Most procedures can be done in the office or a same-day surgical center and you'll be back to work in about a week.

Life in the Fast Lane

We'll be go to the devil: Cardinal Publishing, once a fast-growing printer of church bulletins — blessed with success, some had said in the past — has declared Chapter 11 bankruptcy. Claude Mastrosimone, 57, went from serving two churches in 1980 to serving some 250 churches in the 1990s; he had recently built a 10,000 square foot facility on Reed Road in West Trenton, the Cardinal Business Park.

Founded in 1980, Cardinal employs about 40 people. Though it does publish newsletters and books (a history of the Diocese of Trenton, for instance) the firm's chief product is Sunday bulletins for Roman Catholic churches. The bulletins are customized for each church and contain display advertisements.

"It's a cut-throat business," says an industry observer. "Each printer is offering a better deal than the next, and profit margins are dropping."

Neither Claude Mastrosimone nor his attorney (Arthur C. Linderman in Hackensack, 201-342-2409) returned calls by press time.

In the church bulletin business the ads are supposed to pay for the paper (600 to 2,000 copies, four to six 8 1/2 by 11 pages), the printing, and the distribution. Printers sometimes supply a computer so the church can electronically transmit the bulletin information. Then there is usually supposed to be a rebate to the parish from the ad sales.

Mastrosimone's father died of black lung disease when he was 14. He attended Trenton Catholic High and St. Joseph's College in Philadelphia, then enlisted in the Marines and graduated from Rider College. He worked as a circulation manager for the Trenton Times from 1964 to 1971 and then moved to Chicago to work for a church bulletin publisher. He headed that company's east coast division when he left to found his own firm in 1980.

With a $30,000 loan Mastrosimone founded the firm in a space formerly occupied by a barbershop, then moved to a four-car garage, and that first year his gross revenues were $47,000. He printed and folded the bulletins on Friday, then distributed them on Saturday to 14 southern parishes. Mastrosimone was reported to have been the first to offer typesetting and graphics services instead of just printing services. In 1986 he began providing churches with computer services that reduced turn-around time. His firm grew to serve more than 250 parishes on the east coast and to claim a market share of 252 percent. Its revenues grew from $47,000 to a reported $2.7 million in 1990, and by 1995 they had dropped to $2.5 million.

For a real cut-throat business, try church bulletins; Caxton Corp. has downsized but it's thriving again.

Competitors include J.S. Paluch of Chicago, Parish Services in New Jersey, and the Chronicle.

A creditors' meeting is scheduled for Thursday, June 13, at 1 p.m., in Room 3036 of the east wing of the federal courthouse annex, 402 East State Street, Trenton. Deadline to file proof of a claim for this case, number 96-32507, is September 11.

Caxton Will Stay

Last June when Caxton Corp. downsized, more than 50 people — nearly two-thirds of the work force — lost some of the best paid jobs in Princeton.

The founder of the commodities trading firm, Bruce Kovner, said then that he would return two-thirds of the $1.8 billion that he managed and would keep working with only $500 million in two foreign funds. "I thought Caxton had gotten too big and bureaucratic," Kovner said in a press release. "This down-sizing will help us respond in a more focused and agile manner."

"That's exactly what we did do," said Caxton's president, Peter D'Angelo, in a phone interview last week. "The last six months of last year was quite good, trading wise, and in the four months this year we are similarly doing very well."

In June neither Kovner nor D'Angelo responded to requests for an interview, though D'Angelo faxed a press release and a correction he had sent to the Wall Street Journal. "The main reason I wanted to get back to you," says D'Angelo now, "was to let the community know we are still there and we intend to be there for the long term."

"Size is always a question in our business, and we felt the size we had reached was too large," D'Angelo says. "It was really that simple. We still trade the same markets we always traded. We still trade in the same way we always traded, just with less money than we had at the peak size we had last year."

"We always intended to stay there and that is what we have done. We have around 35 employees, and we expect that to be our permanent size. That is down from about 80. We have no intention of reducing staff. In fact we just signed a new lease," says D'Angelo, who now has a five-year extension from the new owners of the building. "We are retaining 60 percent of the building."

Peter D'Angelo has been with Kovner since Caxton grew from incubator space at Commodities Corp. to its own quarters on Morgan Lane to 29,000 feet on Enterprise Drive. Caxton had survived 1987's Black Friday and doubled its money that year. In December, 1994, Caxton had emerged apparently unscathed (except for a $36 million fine) from an SEC anti-fraud investigation. And in a business known for ulcer-stimulating highs and lows, Caxton had clocked an impressive overall return of 35 percent.

In Jack Schwager's "Market Wizards: Interviews with Top Traders" Kovner is pictured as a Harvard-trained intellectual who got bitten by the trading game, had outstanding success, and took losses in a disciplined way. Not the sort of person who would impulsively shutter his business.

The legend about Kovner starts with him as a harpsichord-playing taxi driver when he began trading commodities in 1977 by borrowing $3,000 on his credit card. He did have a blue collar background, but he also graduated cum laude

Forty Years Later, A Few Things Haven't Changed

When the Aerochem Research Laboratory was started by a group of Princeton University professors in 1956, cows grazed by the side of Route 1. Princeton, the town, buzzed with talk of unification, and the "corridor," then a charming two-lane template for what would become, was abuzz with talk about a "linear city" stretching from Washington, D.C., to Boston. Since Aerochem's inception, chemist Hartwell F. Calcote has been its president and director of research, running the firm according to certain principles etched in stone: Small begets continuity. Diversity makes for sound science. After 39 years, it's surprising how little has changed.

Aerochem has survived at 882 Ridge Road through nine U.S. presidents and more than a dozen new traffic lights, in a large facility which the 10-person firm has never outgrown. In April it downsized to 7,000 square feet at 50 Washington Road, between Princeton Indoor Tennis and the train station. "We occupied a piece of property for 40 years," says Calcote, who reasons that a relatively static staff size and rising property values and taxes prompted the relocation. For Calcote, the move is a once in a lifetime deal. "It's very hard to move a laboratory, and I won't do it again either," he says.

Aerochem does contract research in physical chemistry and fluid mechanics for government and industry, with a particular expertise in combustion and electrical discharge chemistry. Right now it is involved with developing combustion for advance materials used in semiconductors and is undergoing projects to reduce noise, smoke, and soot in jet engines. Clients include NASA, the Air Force, the Navy, and the National Science Foundation (Aerochem's industry clients don't want to be identified, says Calcote). In the future, Calcote would like to see the firm commercializing some of the products and materials it has developed through its research.

A physical chemist who earned his Ph.D. from Princeton in 1948 and got his B.S. from Catholic University in Washington, D.C., the 76-year-old Calcote remembers his academic years being steeped in paradox. "I was a musician earning my way through school to get a degree in chemical engineering, and then I taught electronics at Princeton in the Navy program to get a PhD in physical chemistry. And now as a director of research I practice law and finance."

Calcote remembers "tiring" of management early in his career, when he was a vice president of a Virginia-based firm. "I wanted to go to a university and get out of all this administrative business," he says. "In the meantime some of the people at Princeton offered me a position as director of this company. The chance to come to the nice environment of Princeton overwhelmed me, so here I am. My objective of getting out of management didn't work."

But Calcote has proven that his disinterest in managing is proportional to his ability at it. In 1960 Aerochem was purchased by a firm called Sybron and became a wholly-owned subsidiary. The other founders dispersed, but Calcote remained president and director of research, and by 1976, he and two other employees purchased the company back. "In 39 years you can do a lot of things," he says. He attributes much of the firm's success to the plynth of principles on which the company was founded. "I think that philosophy was very solid," he says. "That's something that the original people I founded the company with developed in the first week. We had some long evening meetings and decided what our philosophy was going to be. It was a good policy and it worked."

Small Is Good: Calcote's Aerochem practices slow growth — and still uses the blackboard.

Rule number one was to keep contracts small and numerous. "One mistake that small companies make is they get big contracts," says Calcote. "If they lose them they're in trouble. One of our policies has been to keep our individual contract size small, compared to the total, so we could afford to lose it." A corollary to that, Calcote adds, is the need for a company in the contract research field to have several sources providing the funding. "The tough times in the past have been, particularly, when we've had large commercial contracts," he says. "What typically happens is the company changes management, and they change their research policy and we get dropped suddenly and we are without a contract."

Calcote also insists on keeping a diverse body of researchers. "Good ideas come from people with different disciplines working together," he says. Any of Aerochem's projects now might have a physical chemist, a physicist, or a fluid mechanic collaborating on it, thereby minimizing error and confusion, Calcote explains. "If you put two chemists together they may not want to admit that they don't understand a simple principle," he says. "But if you have a fluid mechanist in the crowd he may not be expected to understand the chemistry so he can ask simple questions. That forces the chemists to think about whether they understand what they think they do."

In the late '50s, R&D on the corridor was Einstein, the Institute, and even a strange government hovercraft whooshing over the Plainsboro lowlands. Calcote, the father of four (including Princeton-based attorney Elaine Britt) and grandfather of five, who met his wife, Marianna, in high school in Washington D.C., remembers wistfully the quiet intimacy of life in Princeton during the '50s.

"I used to go to work without going through any stop signs," he says. "You'd walk downtown and you knew half the people. And now it's so large I can go downtown and sit for half an hour and not see anybody I know. That's a measure of how things have changed." — Peter J. Mladineo from Harvard (Class of 1966), pursued a PhD at Harvard for five years, and managed political campaigns. He parlayed his original $3,000 stake into $4,000 with two trades, then sunk it all into a perilous stake in soybeans, growing the stake into $45,000, and watching the market panic and his account drop to $22,000 in one day. That day, he says in Schwager's book, was what made him a trader.

"I went into emotional shock. I could not believe how stupid I had been — how badly I had failed to understand the market, in spite of having studied the markets for years. I was sick to my stomach, and I didn't eat for days. I thought I had blown my career as a trader."

This trade influenced his future policies on self discipline — a requirement for every trader. "To this day," says Kovner, "when something happens to disturb my emotional equilibrium and my sense of what the world is like, I close out all positions related to that event."

Kovner was hired by Michael Marcus — another legendary trader — to join Commodities Corp., founded in 1970 by Helmut Weymar. Marcus and Kovner helped to take Commodities Corp. into what has been called its "golden era." After six years with Commodities Corp., in 1983, Kovner left with $7.6 million to found Caxton Corp.

In 1987 — despite the stock market crash — Kovner called everything right and doubled investors' money. He repeated this coup in 1989, and looking at averaged annual compounded returns from 1979 to 1989, he was realizing a whopping 87 percent.

In 1991 the SEC and the Justice Department alleged in civil complaints that Caxton violated antifraud provisions of two securities laws. Caxton had bought very large leveraged long positions in the April two-year Treasury notes and, in effect, cornered the issue so that other traders had to buy the notes back at unfavorable prices.

Kovner was not charged as an individual, and while the problem was being investigated, Kovner went on a self-imposed sabbatical year. In 1994 earnings were flat — even suffering a small loss. In December, 1994, Caxton paid the $36 million in fines and restitution. In 1995, although nearly every market rallied, Caxton's flat returns dragged the 12-year average down to just over 30 percent.

D'Angelo confirms the June report that Kovner had returned $800 million he was managing for the London-based Global Asset Management fund but would continue to manage money for the Rothschild family in France. "That was reduced in size along with the rest of the funds," D'Angelo says now.

Did the reduction prove to be a good decision? Says D'Angelo: "I can honestly say we think it was, and many of our investors agree."

Bell to Bloomberg

Stuart Bell moved to London for what was to be a one year assignment for Michael Bloomberg. Ten years and three children later he came back to the United States to take over for John Aubert as manager of Bloomberg's operation at 100 Business Park Drive. Aubert, who started the Princeton operation, has answered Bloomberg's call to work in New York.

A native of Larchmont, New York, Bell was in English major at Dartmouth, Class of 1980, who joined Bloomberg in New York in 1985 as a sales person. Two years later he opened the European sales office in 1987.

Bell points out that this is a management position: "I'm anxious to take on a productive role in Bloomberg. I was managing 450 people in 16 different offices in Europe, and this operation is 950 people. It is primarily data collection and data entry, but Princeton also has multimedia, publishing, and news operations," says Bell. Bloomberg offers on-line, real-time information, analytics, news and trading systems for all financial markets.

In London Bell and his wife, Mary V., lived in the expatriate's quarter. Bell says he realized it was time to come home when nine-year-old Clint became expert at hailing cabs but did not know about playing in a suburban back yard. Their other children are Corley, 7, and Cody, 3.
